24F isn't even the daytime HIGH in Minnesota later this week. Pussies.

Layers are the best. They hold more warm air to keep you warmer and you can adjust them as temps change. Pantyhose or tights under jeans can keep you warm without adding a lot of bulk too.

Hats and scarves. 2 scarves is better than one. That's why all the homeless people have so many scarves. They do keep you warm and are easy to put on or stow away.

I live in DC. This isn't the north. Temps change wildly. It will be 60 degrees next week.

Down here in Florida they don't even sell regular winter gear however, they do sell hunting gear and it's the same thing just camo. The only warm clothes I own are for hunting lol.

Same.

People in the south have jackets and stuff, but often nothing designed for extended cold. And it's not really available either (apart from maybe something at an extremely rare ski shop), and even then, certainly nothing tactical.

And hunting gear has lots of stash pockets. Tactical enough!

it will be cold, uncomfortable dangerous and inconvenient. But then again, so is communism.

Layers are important.

Get some Hot Hands or other hand warmers too.

I used to work in a food cart during college, and during the winter having a hand Warner in each shoe was the best.

Technically they tell you not to do that on the package so proceed at your own risk.

Go to cabellas and get the bibs with the sleeves. It's like a jumpsuit. You'll look like the camo Michelin man but they're warm. They're having Christmas sales now so they won't be as expensive as usual. Put some long johns underneath, then comfy jeans, long sleeve, then sweatshirt. Layering is annoying but you'll be glad you did. Wear your biggest boots, get thin socks, put wool socks over them and warmers in your toe. Thermacare also makes some big back warmers for muscle pain. I used to use them for cramps but then I learned they keep my core very warm while hunting too! Lol.

You can always shed layers to cool down if you're too warm. Better to be safe than cold lol
